The Cross-Cultural Learning: Australia's Oldest & Newest Citizens project has been a highlight on the Adult Learners' Week calendar for the last two years. The project offers participants the opportunity to experience a guided tour through regions of significance to Aboriginal people, going beyond the surface of what is ordinarily taught. In 2018, the project was conducted in the following regions:

- Coorong National Park including the Camp Coorong Museum - significant to the Ngarrindjeri people
- Point Pearce including Innes National Park on the Yorke Peninsula - significant to the Narungga people
- Ngaut Ngaut Conservation Park on the Murray - significant to the Nganguraku people

Initially targeting newly arrived refugees and migrants but open to all members of the community, the project gives participants a greater understanding and appreciation of the history, culture and plight of Australia's first people. The project draws on the differences between - and within - cultures but more importantly the parallels between them. Participants have the opportunity to hear the lived experiences of each of the local Elder tour guides, making the program personal to each learner undertaking it.

Many participants felt enriched by their inclusion in the project, particularly by Quentin Agius' spiritual connection to the land (Burra). Learners were touched by the importance placed on passing the information down to younger generations and seeing the tour guides very young grandchildren also demonstrating their knowledge by relaying information to the group.

The Junction Community Centre plans to continue to educate the local community about Australia’s history and Aboriginal people. They have strengthened their partnership with the Grannies Group (Aboriginal Elders that advocate for the ATSI community) as a result of this project. The Junction Community Centre has been widely acknowledged for this project, including being nominated for an award in 'Recognition of a non-ATSI organisation for their contribution to the ATSI community'.

The impact on participants has been profound. There has been a new appreciation of the Aboriginal history, culture and lifestyle.
